Strategic Communications for Lawyers: How Counsel Can Help Guide Utility Outreach Strategies Without Being a Total Buzz Kill

Between increasing awareness around contaminants of concern such as PFAS, the need to attract a more dynamic workforce, and rising costs leading to greater affordability challenges, development of effective communications strategies has never been more important for public clean water agencies. But no one can ruin a perfectly good public outreach plan quite like a risk-averse lawyer. This panel of utility executives, in-house counsel, and communications professionals will discuss tips and tricks attorneys can use to provide productive legal advice on utility communications strategies while still being good “team players.”

Not Your Mother's Citizen Suits: Hot Trends in Citizen Enforcement

While reasonable minds can disagree, we have a hard time believing that the lawmakers penning the Clean Water Act could have envisioned the sheer volume of lawsuits being brought by citizen plaintiffs these days. Environmental organizations challenging state antidegradation policies, groups of farmers seeking to compel EPA regulation of PFAS in biosolids, and activists looking to give environmental justice initiatives teeth are some of the topics this panel of legal experts will cover.

I Can Feel It Coming In the Air Tonight:

Clean Air Act Challenges Facing Clean Water Utilities

Clean Water Act issues aren't the only ones keeping wastewater and stormwater utility counsel up at night. From implementation of the ozone national ambient air quality standards (NAAQS) to environmental justice challenges of critical infrastructure permitting, utilities are increasingly facing legal and regulatory issues arising under the Clean Air Act. Join this panel of experts as they discuss what utilities are up against and what might be coming down the pike.

PFAS Toolkit: Best Practices for Avoiding and Defending Against Liability Claims Related to PFAS in Wastewater and Residuals

As more utilities begin to monitor for PFAS in their influent, effluent, and biosolids, it is becoming increasingly critical for clean water agencies to proactively assess and reduce their liability exposure and respond to threatened legal action in a way that helps maximize chances for a favorable outcome. This panel of seasoned experts will explore PFAS through the lens of utility risk management, covering topics ranging from the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (CERCLA) to industrial pretreatment, notices of intent to sue letters (NOIs), Clean Water Act permit shield protections, and insurance coverage.

It's a Small World After All: Regional Differences – and Similarities – in Clean Water Act Implementation

Clean water utilities know all too well that often times Clean Water Act permitting and enforcement can depend largely on your state and regional regulators. Such differences are likely to become even more pronounced now that courts are not required to give deference to federal agency decisions. But at the same time, even taking into account these differing regulatory approaches, clean water utilities in different parts of the country nevertheless face similar legal challenges. This panel of experts from various States and EPA Regions will discuss key Clean Water Act permitting and water quality issues and how they are being handled in their respective necks of the woods.

Top Clean Water Legal Developments of the Year (Closed to Press and Regulators)

Curious about the potential implications of upending a bedrock administrative law principle that had been in place since 1984? Wondering if any regulations are going to escape judicial scrutiny in light of the Supreme Court's ruling in Corner Post. Just want answers on when the heck agency enforcement is akin to a "common law" cause of action pursuant to Jarkesy? Come listen to a panel of top clean water lawyers review the most important court decisions and legal developments of the past year and analyze the impacts they could have on your utility's operations.

Business and Legal Issues Informing Equitable Risk Allocation

As the use of collaborative delivery methods for the design and construction of new water/wastewater projects continues to expand, public utilities are seeking to find an equitable balance of risk allocation between their agencies and collaborative delivery teams. This session will define the fundamental risks to be considered for new capital investment and explore when such risks represent business decisions, legal decisions, or both. The session will also address best practices for utility managers to seek advice of counsel prior to finalizing risk allocation to improve project outcomes.
